Ravel Paper

Tiffany Lin

December 12, 2025

Maurce Ravel's Pavane pour une infante défunte (composed in 1899) was one of his first published pieces (1900). The piece was commissioned and dedicated to Winnaretta Singer, Princesse Edmond de Polignac, a major patron of the arts in Paris.[1] It was officially premiered in 1902 by the pianist Ricardo Viñes, and was well received by the audience.[2] Ravel later explained that he chose the title due to its alliteration, in that the music evokes 'a pavan that a little princess might, in former times, have danced at the Spanish court.'[3]

The works of Edgar Allan Poe had a significant influence on Ravel due to its compositional methods and aesthetic ideals.[4] He later declared that 'my greatest teacher in composition was Edgar Allan Poe'.[5] However, in relation to the Pavane, Poe argued that melancholy is the most legitimate poetic tone and that the death of a beautiful woman is the most poetic subject.[6] Ravel did title it Pavane in accordance with Poe's topic, but it was only chosen because he liked the sound of it.[7] Ravel ultimately found a deeper source of true melancholy later in his career, in which more geared towards human guilt and suffering shown by the poet, Paul Verlaine's imprisonment.[8]

1. Maurice Ravel, Pavane pour une infante défunte, ed. Alexandra Marx (München: G. Henle Verlag, 2018), https://www.henle.de/media/ec/3a/04/1697725850/1260-1697725850-sync.pdf.
2. Ravel.
3. Ravel.
4. Gerald Larner, Maurice Ravel, 20th-Century Composers (London: Phaidon, 1996), 43, 59–60, 228, ISBN: 0714832707.
5. Larner, Maurice Ravel, 43.
6. Larner, Maurice Ravel, 43.
7. Larner, Maurice Ravel, 59.
8. Larner, Maurice Ravel, 43.

With the Pavane's success, Ravel orchestrated it for a small orchestra in 1910, premiering in 1911,[9] which became even more popular after its orchestration.[10] Despite the Pavane becoming popular in salons and among amateur pianists, by 1912,[11] Ravel has his own reflections on it that is quite harsh and self-critical.[12] He criticized the piece for showing too much imitation of Chabrier and Fauré's style,[13] and not much originality.[14] Along with the critiques, the Pavane's fame was attributed less to the composition itself and towards the interpretations of its performers.[15]

The Pavane reflects a 16th century slow processional dance.[16] The use of classical dance forms was part of a broader revival among other French composers such as Saint-Saëns.[17] From a stylistic standpoint, the Pavane draws heavily on classical and 19th century precedents. The elements include a five-part rondo form, firmly rooted in G major with a brief turn to G minor, and reliance on classical compositional means (repetition, sequence, pedal point, contrary motion), and the frequent use of 9th chords.[18] Despite the convention framework, Ravel portrays the melodic development in a more mature style. The opening melody in measures 1–2 with the accompanying detached impression of a lute accompanying[19] leads to a continuation in measures 3–4, ending on a half cadence in measures 6–7.[20] At measure 13, the , the first episode rises over a repeated chords over a pedal point.[21] At the cadence of that section, starting at measures 25, Ravel uses independently moving block dissonances of 9th and 13ths, a features of Debussy's works.[22] The opening theme returns again at measure

9. Ravel, Pavane pour une infante défunte.
10. Larner, Maurice Ravel, Maurice Ravel, 60.
11. Ravel, Pavane pour une infante défunte.
12. Roland-Manuel, Maurice Ravel, trans. Cynthia Jolly, Contemporary composers (London: D. Dobson, 1947), 28–29.
13. Larner, Maurice Ravel, Maurice Ravel, 60.
14. Roland-Manuel, Maurice Ravel, Maurice Ravel, 28–29.
15. Roland-Manuel, Maurice Ravel, 28–29.
16. Ravel, Pavane pour une infante défunte.
17. Ravel.
18. Peter Kaminsky, Unmasking Ravel: New Perspectives on the Music, Eastman Studies in Music (Rochester, NY: University of Rochester Press, 2011), 86–90, ISBN: 9781580463379.
19. Norman Demuth, Ravel, The Master Musicians (London: J.M. Dent, 1947), 50–53, ISBN: 0883556901.
20. Kaminsky, Unmasking Ravel: New Perspectives on the Music, Unmasking Ravel, 86–90.
21. Demuth, Ravel.
22. Demuth, Ravel, 50–53.

28, this time more complex, with large open voicings doubling the octave and 15th, and leads into the G minor section at measure 40, with a dominant 13th[23] at measure 42. The theme then returns for the final time at measure 60, this time in it's most florid form with the lute effect doubled in 16ths.[24] In addition, in the final cadence section En élargissant beaucoup spanning measures 70–72, the pianist is faced with large voicings of chords, requiring much pedal control.[25] The Pavane shows Ravel's technical skill in melodic development which foreshadows the[26] of his maturity in his later works.

Although Ravel emphasized that his primary influence was Chabrier, his admiration for Debussy and influence is also apparent.[27] For example, the parallel ninths in the 1899 Pavane is quite similar to that found in Debussy's 1896 'Sarabande,' which Ravel later orchestrated[28] in 1922.[29] In regards to Chabrier, his 1887 opera, Le Roi malgré lui include successions of both diatonic and chromatic ninth chords. This technique that Chabrier uses can be stemmed from Chopin's Nouvelle étude in D♭, which uses sequential sevenths.[30] Howat writes that Ravel, Debussy, and Chabrier all use a technique called harmonic ellipsis. This means they ignore the typical classical resolution of a chord, instead immediately jumping to the next ninth chord.[31] Ultimately, this technique of harmonic ellipses became a defining element of Ravel's own composition style.[32]

The issue of the tempo in the Pavane has been a subject of debate in regards to the performance and interpretation of it. Piano editions prior to 1913 have the metronome marking as ♩ = 80, while the tempo of editions after 1913 have been reduced to ♩ = 54, which is mirrored in the 1912 orchestral score.[33] The absence of corrections in Ravel's personal copy and

23. Demuth, Ravel, Ravel, 50–53.
24. Demuth, Ravel, 50–53.
25. Demuth, Ravel, 50–53.
26. Demuth, Ravel, 50–53.
27. Deborah Mawer, The Cambridge Companion to Ravel, Cambridge Companions to Music (New York: Cambridge University Press, 2000), 72–73, ISBN: 0521648564.
28. Larner, Maurice Ravel, Maurice Ravel, 228.
29. Mawer, The Cambridge Companion to Ravel, The Cambridge Companion to Ravel, 72–73.
30. Mawer, The Cambridge Companion to Ravel, 72–73.
31. Mawer, The Cambridge Companion to Ravel, 72–73.
32. Mawer, The Cambridge Companion to Ravel, 72–73.
33. Ravel, Pavane pour une infante défunte.

the lack of tempo indications in the orchestral autograph complicate this matter.[34] Ravel's sarcastic comment to Charles Oulmont who performed the Pavane, saying that Oulmont "wrote a 'Pavane for a Dead Princess' not a 'Dead Pavane for a Princess,'"[35] suggests that Ravel resisted excessively slow interpretations. To further complicate this matter, Ravel's own piano roll recording in 1922, when analyzed, fluctuates by more than 10bpm, and the dynamics diverges from the printed music[36] despite insisting that it should be played calmly without any rubato.[37] This suggests that both the tempo and dynamics in Pavane should be flexible and up to the interpretation of the performer.

Your Lie in April

*Pavane*appears in Your Lie in April as an important and symbolic representation in the series, representing an important theme(?). Already in the piece's title, Pavane pour une infante défunte, the meaning behind is already shown. [Despite not literally about dead princess] In which "pavane" is a slow dance and the "princess" referring to Kaori. However, Kaori's health deteriorates, leading to the "dead princess" referred to in the title.

In episode 16, Pavane starts to play at 20:33 and at 21:15, Kaori asks "Want to commit double suicide?" quoted from Masahiro Mita's "Ichigo Doumei."

["T/N: A Japanese novel published in 1990 about a suicidal boy who meets a girl in the hospital. Kaori is quoting from it." bato ch32, Easy Going Scans]

[ichigo doumei context]

In episode 17, 6:58, which correlates to chapter 33, Kousei hears Pavane being played on the way home and runs away in denial, saying "I don't want to hear it... I don't want to hear any stupid Ravel... I won't want to think about anything... I wish I could just stop hearing everything." bato ch33

["T/N: Ravel was a French composer whose piece, "Pavane for a Dead Princess," is heavily referenced in the Ichigo Alliance novel Kaori quotes from in Chapter 32. In the novel, the

34. Ravel, Pavane pour une infante défunte.
35. Ravel.
36. Ravel.
37. Demuth, Ravel.

main character plays the song on piano for female lead, who is hospital-ridden and has had one of her legs amputated." bato ch33, Easy Going Scans]

Kousei isn't literally rejecting the composer, he is rejecting the fate the piece represents. So in episode 18, 18:52, Kousei responds with "I can't commit double suicide with you.' He is refusing to accept that Kaori will be the "dead princess" and he will not be playing Ravel for her 'funeral.' reddit

Furthermore, Kousei performs Rachmaninoff's arrangement of Tchaikovsky's "Rose Adagio" and "Garland Waltz" from "The Sleeping Beauty" as a stark contrast from the "Pavane." ch36

White Album 2

Early in the Introductory Chapter, Haruki plays the melody of *Pavane*while Kazusa plays the piano arrangement. This is the first time it's directly mentioned that the pianist accompanies Haruki.

["Haruki: The piano accompanied me many times, until I finally got into shape. And when it was pleased with my form, it accompanied my music. It was a mysterious sound that would pull pranks on me, guide me, and even show me my weaknesses simply through hearing it." Todokanai Translations]